MaxCoin Whitepaper

Abstract

Keiser launched Maxcoin in 2014, made outrageous promisesabout its ecosystem and price, then bailed on it with zeroexplanation. After publicly announcing his commitment to a $20million market cap, tweeting very bullish buy signals and thusinfluencing his fans to invest, Keiser went dark on Maxcoinand eventually claimed it was his wife Stacy's idea. The cointanked but the former Wallstreet Keiser undoubtedly made somecash.@JoshPaulHoosier We have not abandoned our $20 mn. market capobjective. It's probably a 20 bagger from here.— Max Keiser (@maxkeiser) June 30, 2014A 20 bagger. Let that sink in. The price was $.03 at the time,making a 20 bagger $.60. Maxcoin is presently $0.001. If youbelieved Mad Max, you'd be down 97% on your investment.Maxcoin should have been a sign to stay away from Keiser'sfurther crypto advice. But according to Keiser from the MCXNOWchat log, Maxcoin was just the warm-up: "Don't play the game,play the players."
